New full length of this groundbreaking canadian duo! AUN's previous travels took the duo to space, hell and back. Now home to tackle more earthly concerns 'Phantom Ghost' shows AUN at its most complex and determined, but also at its most accessible, while still quite adept to their use of extreme tones. Previous outings heralded as masterpieces of ambient and heavy psychedelic strains, 'Phantom Ghost' finds AUN's considerable stylistic palette, augmented again. Fractured voice and locked dry, immovable, hypnotic rhythms are now woven into the ethereal and experimental sonics, now also magnified by a sound edging on indie-noise-rock, while delving deeper into their penchant for pristine and shattered electronics. Drenched in celestial gazy-prog sheen, fuelled by blurry acid drenched dreams, 'Phantom Ghost' is AUN at its most otherworldly, but also most grounded and terrestrial. The Phantom and Ghost in focus here, could easily be of the supernatural variety, but are more the result of complex sound wave apparitions during the recording process. Very human in its essence and execution, but also increasingly beautifully machine driven, 'Phantom Ghost' is a wide new door opened by the constantly mutating AUN.

Q&A with AUN

Q: Is it noisy dream pop? A: Possibly, but depends on what you define as noise or pop Q: Is it doom? A: It's pretty heavy, but not really doom or metal, but we did play with Away from Voivod, and he's like metal royalty! Q: Is it darkwave-gothic? A: It's not like dracula dark, but it's pretty dark. Q: Is it apocalyptic with touches of light and optimism? A: Yeah, why not! Q: Can you dance to it? A: Well that really depends on several factors.
